

Personal Statement for President

James A. Watt, Jr., CNIM, R.EP.T, FASNM

The ASNM has always been more than an organization — it is the community that defines, protects, and advances the profession we love. Its mission is clear and demanding: to optimize the quality and safety of the monitoring care our patients receive. This Society gave me a career and a community, and I am running for President to help it do the same for those who come after us — because that mission is best served when we invest in our people, our standards, and each other.

I have spent nearly thirty years in this field, and many of them within this Society — serving on the Board, editing The Monitor, chairing the Applied Philanthropy Committee, and helping technologists across the country reach certification. That work has taught me a simple truth: the ASNM's strength has never been any one of us. It is all of us.

Together, I believe we can:

Strengthen our education — so every provider, at every stage, has a clear path to competency.

Expand our guidelines — keeping our standards evidence-based, literature-driven, and clinically relevant.

Deepen our collaboration — with ASET, ACNS, ISIN, and our many regional and international partners, because a united IONM community is a stronger one.

Grow our membership — welcoming every provider, from every corner of IONM, who cares for the patient.

These are not my priorities to pursue alone; they are ours to advance together. What unites us is the patient on the table and the standard we hold ourselves to. Let's raise it — together.
